

Men's Conference Magnetic with Kelly Talamo

Statistics tell us that average American male has less than one true friend. (Someone they can count on, anytime, for anything). Translation, millions of men don't have any. Not a one!

For the men in our culture, friendship isn't just an interesting topic. It's a hole in the soul. So what's with that? Guys are everywhere. How can men be so plentiful and friends be so scarce? Well the answer to that question isn't in G.Q. It's in the word of God. And God has a lot to say about the friendships.

In this short but compelling series Magnetic, Kelly Talamo is going to take us inside the world of friendships. We'll discover how friendships begin, what makes them so attractive, and why we will stay in a friendship that's harmful. We'll learn what it takes to make a friend, and what it takes to be one. It's a series that every guy needs.

Speaker

Kelly Talamo, is a published author and speaker specializing in keynotes, men's conferences, and personal leadership training and development. His message "Personal Responsibility" has been well received by dozens of corporate, church and ministry organizations around the country for over fifteen years.

Kelly studied at Louisiana State University, Tulane University and later at Columbia International University and Seminary.

In 2000, Kelly founded the ministry of Men Step Up in Atlanta, GA, building a leadership team of thirty-five men. Each week his team would present the truth of God's word to over a hundred men who came to learn how to become better fathers, husbands, businessmen, and friends.

Kelly's mission is to encourage men with a passion for Christ, equipping them to lead life-changing studies in the word of God. He personally coaches areas of leadership, presentation skills, and spiritual disciplines.
